The Dunkirk Evacuation

Shortlisted for 'Best visual Effects'

Alan Griffiths, a new member of Downs, owns a television production company called World Media Rights (WMR) which has been making television series for 14 years. One of his clients is Netflix. His company supplies them (and others) with television series.

He has kindly offered a preview of a new programme to be shown on Netflix later this year. It is about the evacuation from Dunkirk which, as you know, was a local event. In May 1940 the Royal Navy brought, under constant attack, 338,226 troops back from France. Two of the evacuation routes went around the North Goodwin Lighthouse and past Deal to Dover.

WMR has taken a mass of old black and white footage and restored it and colourised it so that it looks as though it was filmed recently. WMR has refined film colourisation and currently are the leaders in that field. Alan will give a brief talk about the process.
